

ART, ART HISTORY & VISUAL STUDIES

Master's Degree in Digital Art History

Wired!
visualizing the past

dukewired.org

Master's Degree in Digital Art History at Duke University:

The Department of Art, Art History & Visual Studies at Duke University offers a Master's Degree in Digital Art History.

The 18-month program integrates historical disciplines and the study of cultural artifacts with visualization technologies for the analysis and presentation of research. The program builds on courses and well-developed strengths at Duke University and requires 10 courses over three semesters in addition to funded summer research. Students affiliate with an existing faculty research initiative, from which they develop their own independent research project for the M.A. thesis. Common themes that unite the various projects are the visualization of process, the representation of change over time, recontextualizing displaced objects and object biographies.

The M.A. prepares students for advanced scholarly work in art and architectural history, archaeology, urban studies, visual studies, and other related fields, as well as for work in public history, city planning and architectural design, cultural heritage, museum exhibition design, and visualization-based journalism.

The ideal candidate seeks engagement with the Digital Humanities, and conceptualizes digital visualization as a way of doing research. The program encourages applicants in art history as well as the Humanities and Social Sciences, whether from established disciplines such as history, archaeology and art history, or emerging fields of study, such as spatial history, visual & media studies, and cultural geography.

Partial scholarships are available in the second and third semesters contingent on excellent performance.

For more information and to apply, visit dukewired.org.

Duke University

Master's Degree in Digital Art History

For more information, visit dukewired.org or email infoWiredMA@duke.edu.

 ART, ART HISTORY & VISUAL STUDIES

Dept. of Art, Art History & Visual Studies
Duke University
Box 90766
Durham, NC 27708
aahvs.duke.edu